On the Price of Everything and the Value of Nothing (2002) - chmike ====== cantthinkofone I guess that is a fun trick to explain to children how electricity works, instead of explaining how electrons are not free and moving from one element to another with what we call the electric potential in the wire. ------ Animats _On the Price of Everything and the Value of Nothing_ Whoa. That's a _really_ weird book title. I think it comes from Feynman. Republican and Democratic senators are considering whether to pull the United States out of the United Nations Human Rights Council. The two-year term of the U.N. body ends on June 10. The United States is the council's biggest donor and has withdrawn from several other international human rights bodies over the past decade. Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina and Democratic Sen. Chris Coons of Delaware have requested a Foreign Relations Committee briefing on the matter, according to a letter they sent to the panel's chairman, Republican Bob Corker of Tennessee, obtained by the Associated Press. The House has yet to take any action on the matter. "This should be a bipartisan effort, frankly, to reconsider where we are going as a country and join the rest of the world in ensuring that human rights are an essential part of our foreign policy," Graham said in an interview Wednesday. "I think it will be a short conversation. I think we'll address it in a bipartisan way." The United States has joined the International Criminal Court, but not the International Court of Justice, which is the top judicial body of the U.N. system. In 2002, the Bush administration announced the withdrawal from the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, saying it did not align with American values. Brush Basics

Select the Brush tool, which looks like a paintbrush with a bristly handle and a circular head. Click and drag to paint. Or, you can click and hold down to paint. Or, click and right-click to paint. Or, double-click to paint. Tip: Drag through a difficult area in order to select more of that area. Click a point in an area you have selected, and the Brush will paint the closest pixel to it that is at or part of the area you have selected. This technique is useful for painting things close together. You can also use the Zoom tool to get closer to a point, and then paint there. Brush Modes and Strokes

Some brushes have very specific brush modes. You can see what these brush modes do by clicking the color box to the right of the brush in the Tools window. Some brush modes paint with the color of your last active brush, and some paint with a different color than your previous brush. For example, a brush with a light yellow color might paint with a red color. Click a brush to select it in the brush window. (Remember, you can click and hold down on a brush to select more than one brush.) Then, in the Tools window, click the color box to the right of the brush in order to access brush modes. Holding the Ctrl key (Windows) or Command key (Macintosh) and pressing the letter v (Windows) or 0 (Macintosh) increases the size of the brush. Holding the Ctrl key and pressing a letter of the alphabet decreases the size of the brush. For example, pressing a in the Tools window makes the brush smaller, pressing b makes it bigger. Finer Strokes A Brush Stroke is a set of pixels with a specific size, color, and style. Use the T option in the stroke mode menu to choose different brush strokes. Different strokes can give different effects. (See below.) Tip: In the Tools window, type Ctrl + click on an area you want to paint to choose the pixels. Then, in the Tools window, click the color box to the right of the brush in order to access brush mode. Then, in the Strokes window, click on the menu button above the text box to select a brush stroke. If you press a while holding down Alt, you can paint with a brush stroke that is in a color, but looks
