Q: Reverse string using recursion I have come across a problem about reversing a string using recursion. As we know the recursion is non-local in the definition process. For example: Write the program that calculates string reverse. Call the function reverse – subroutine. Program that calculates string reverse. Public Sub Main() Console.WriteLine(Reverse("Hello World!")) End Sub Private Function Reverse(ByVal str As String) As String Dim Result As String = "" If str.Length = 0 Then Exit Sub End If Result = Reverse(str.Substring(0, str.Length - 1)) & str.Substring(str.Length - 1) Return Result End Function Give the result: "dlrow olleh" My problem is how can I make the recursive function to be local? So I could to get the result that I want using Reverse("Hello World!") A: If you have a function $F(x,y)$ that computes $F(x,y) = xy$, you can turn it into a local recursive function by defining $G(x,y) = F(x,y)$ and defining $G(x,y) = xy$ as the first case of the $F(x,y)$ function. Thus you effectively have $G(x,y) = xy$ at every level of recursion. In your case, you could create a function $G(x,y)$ that recurses on the first letter, then uses that result to continue recursion using the last letter. Something like this (in C#, which is extremely similar to C): static string Reverse(string s) { if (s == null || s.Length == 0) return s; string reverse_of_x = Reverse(s.Substring(0, s.Length - 1)); string reverse_of_y = Reverse(s.Substring(s.Length - 1)); return reverse_of_x + reverse_of_y; } Q:

Mr. Boddett said that the government had actually been paying higher prices in the past. From 2008 to 2011, the government paid lower price tags for soybeans, as the price of a barrel of oil dropped from an average of $60 a barrel in 2008 to about $30 in 2011. The biggest price gains, according to the study, are for medium yellow soybeans, the most common type of soybean grown in the United States, which went up in price by 68 percent. Hefty prices pushed the average price of soybeans used to feed livestock to $22.13 a ton in 2011. Mr. Boddett and his co-authors, Roberto Moreno, a commodities economist at Texas A&M University, and Stephen Wolfram, a professor of economics at Southern Methodist University, called for the government to be more proactive. While they said the soybean price increase was much more muted than what had been experienced earlier in the crisis, "it's still too early to draw firm conclusions," they wrote. "Clearly, there is more to come as a number of important factors yet to be determined." If the report turns out to be right, and what the government is currently paying is not quite reflective of what farmers are receiving, then something has to be done to bring prices into line. The Congressional Budget Office recently concluded that government payments had been lower than farmers' actual costs, allowing the price gap to widen. The CBO estimated that the government pays $2.2 billion less than it would have in 2011.
