A clinical trial in 49 children with idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura (ITP) with ofatumumab, a human anti-CD20 monoclonal antibody. Idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura is an autoimmune disease in which autoantibodies (autoimmune antibodies) attack the patient's own platelets. The mainstay of treatment for ITP is steroids, which are both immunosuppressive and anti-inflammatory. In patients who are cortisone-dependent, a small percentage of patients achieve a disease remission with anti-B-cell therapy. We report the results of our trial in which we administered the anti-B-cell monoclonal antibody ofatumumab to children with chronic ITP. Patients were randomized in a double-blinded fashion to receive ofatumumab (n = 22) or placebo (n = 27) for 8 weeks. Ofatumumab doses were subsequently increased in an open-label trial of up to 11 mg/kg. At week 8, the number of platelets increased in 26 of 27 patients receiving ofatumumab and in only 17 of 22 patients receiving placebo (P =.002); 11 of 22 (50%) ofatumumab-treated patients became spleen-free, compared with 3 of 27 (11%) placebo-treated patients (P =.001). The most common side effect was a mild rash. The results suggest that ofatumumab is an effective and well-tolerated therapeutic agent for children with ITP.2018 Closures: Adrenaline Adventure Park Open: 9am to Dusk & 8pm to 9am daily Late June through Labor Day Adrenaline Adventure Park will be open to the public during normal operating hours (9am to dusk and 8pm to 9am daily, Labor Day weekend until Labor Day), however, food, drinks and souvenirs will NOT be available.
