Video Mixing

Video Mixing is a free software application from the multimedia category, part of the PackPro software suite. The application enables you to join two different video files into a single file. You can also merge two soundtracks of a single file into one file. The package includes two editions of the program. One is free (download), the other is a full version (payment). The free edition is limited to two files, with a maximum size of 1GB each, whereas the full version has no size restrictions and you can include more than two files into the output file. Of course, you can merge more than two files into one single file and the amount of file(s) can also be unlimited. The default file output format is MPEG. By default, the input and output files are displayed in a small preview window where you can check the preview of the output file. You can also choose between either the regular playback or a forward or backward playback mode. The output file can be saved on the local hard disk, on a CD or in DVD format, and this option depends on the edition you choose. You can also output the merged file in other file formats, such as MP4, 3GP, AVI, 3GA and WMV. The merging procedure takes place in real time, so you can check the progress of the work on the screen. On the output file's properties you can customize the video and audio compression quality, the video and audio frame rate, the number of audio channels and the aspect ratio. You can also choose among multiple output formats and the selected format will be saved on the output file and all other parameters will be set to their defaults. This is a versatile application and the main reason why people use it is because of its user-friendly interface. Pros: It is quite easy to use. You can merge up to four different video files in the program. It has a nice interface. You can customize various output parameters. Cons: It has no support for multiple simultaneous file processing. And finally, the program lacks of professional results. Giant is a programme I use quite often for editing, mainly on video, but sometimes audio as well. So I can tell you a thing or two about it. First off - if you want to see if a video file is compatible with the VLC plugin for it, get the open source VLC player and get the plugin for it. This way you can view the video within your favourite player. There are a couple of versions for it and they both work as advertised. It's not a bug. I think it's a feature, something that is built into VLC, but not everyone realizes it. You just need to switch the video type to "File", if you're looking to do it using the GUI. The problem is that it doesn't work for all videos. You need to check first if the audio track you want is a channel or a file. When you're choosing the file, you should choose "Create audio track". This is where the audio is split to separate files and some of them can be found as a result. I use "File", "New Audio Track" and I usually get about 5 files. If you're looking to join video files, then you should leave it at the "File" option and it will automatically keep the audio file too. You can try to make your videos larger by choosing "Adjust video size" and make it smaller by choosing "Adjust video size". It won't work for all videos. If you just want to save space, choose "Quality:" High and it will make them smaller and the audio file
