Xlive. Dll free download No moreQ: How to use files I have a servlet that a user has to click on to submit a form. It sends the form back to the browser. I have another servlet that will be created to parse the data sent back from the first servlet. I need to grab a chunk of the data that they send back to me and parse it. How do I use a file in this scenario? A: You can just save the data in a file using the java.io.PrintWriter class. This is an example. import java.io.FileWriter; import java.io.IOException; import java.io.PrintWriter; import java.io.StringWriter; PrintWriter writer = new PrintWriter("myfile.txt"); writer.println("This is a test"); writer.println("And now for something completely different"); writer.close(); If you have the data back from a web service it will be as a String. You can do the same thing by getting the data using a BufferedReader. For example, BufferedReader in = new BufferedReader(new InputStreamReader(connection.getInputStream())); String inputLine; while ((inputLine = in.readLine())!= null) { System.out.println(inputLine); } Edit: As @Matt mentioned below, the connection.getInputStream() will return the InputStream for the Web Service response. A: If you're accessing the data from a web service the results come back as an HTTP response. HTTP responses have an associated "input stream" which is where the server sends the data.
