Video privacy YouTube creators, including renowned YouTubers Casey Neistat, Markiplier, and Hank Green, have voiced criticism of the service in recent months. Some have referred to Google's actions as an effort to monopolize the online video industry, though the company has been doing so in a free market for some time. However, the privacy concerns about Google's YouTube have been particularly pronounced, as CEO Sundar Pichai admitted in November that Google "might have made a mistake" by posting users' personal information on its YouTube service. Google has since taken steps to address some of these issues, including shutting down accounts used by online pedophiles, removing extraneous information from search results, and altering privacy settings on videos uploaded by content owners. YouTube has also partnered with a charity known as the Digital Trust to train its users to read the privacy policies of the various websites and services they use. The Chrome browser extension Privacy Badger is also widely used to block trackers and prevent the collection of data on users. Timeline of YouTube YouTube was founded on the 18th of November 2005, by three former PayPal employees: Chad Hurley, Steve Chen, and Jawed Karim. It launched in the US and Europe on the 1st of February 2006. On the 25th of August 2007, Microsoft announced that it was buying YouTube for US$1.65 billion in a deal that gave Microsoft access to YouTube's video content. In 2009, Google took over the media assets of a division of Creative Labs known as the Google Video. In late 2009, Google launched a free music subscription service called Google Music, which moved files to the cloud and played them in a web browser and a mobile app. Google announced YouTube Red in April 2015, a paid service with selected partners that would bring live streams and offline access to TV shows and movies. In 2018, Google announced YouTube TV, a paid multi-channel streaming service with local content and live TV for US$35 a month. The authors report 12 cases of major hand and wrist lesions, all of them associated with arterial line complications. The reported complications are immediate occlusions (4 cases), subocclusions (2 cases), kinking of the lines (4 cases), skin necrosis (1 case), fistula of the vein (1 case) and thrombosis of the distal vessel in a vein graft for coronary surgery (1 case). The immediate causes of this complication were mainly the absence of good suture techniques and the delay in carrying out reoperation. The delayed complications were secondary to bone lesions, carpal and digital venous thrombosis, with secondary local amputation and on many occasions an emergency operation. They carried out 51 operations on the hand and wrist with immediate local treatment and anticoagulant therapy and then carried out a follow-up of 1 to 18 months with the aim of allowing spontaneous re-endothelialization and avoiding thrombosis. The authors conclude that the group of arterial line complications is important and requires a study of the hand and wrist.Click to share on Facebook (Opens in new window) Click to share on Twitter (Opens in new window) We're one week away from the Xbox One's system update, and our initial impressions are in.
