Previous studies in Arabidopsis have indicated that aquaporins (AQPs) affect pollen germination. In this study, the physiological function of human AQP9 was analyzed. A vector containing 35S:AQP9-encoding construct was generated using cauliflower mosaic virus (CaMV) 35S promoter and foreign DNA into onion epidermal cells by particle bombardment. Induction of AQP9 expression in the bombarded cells was confirmed using RT-PCR and Western blotting analyses. Western blotting analysis using anti-peptide antibodies against human AQP9 confirmed that this anti-peptide antibody recognizes a polypeptide with an apparent molecular weight of approximately 26 kDa in the plasma membrane of the bombarded cells. Onion epidermal cell membrane sheets that were prepared 48 h after bombardment were used to analyze the effects of AQP9 overexpression on water permeability. When the membrane sheets were soaked in 10 microM plasmolysin, the osmotic conductivity of AQ 595f342e71
