1931 is a visual novel and suspense simulation game. This game takes place in a parallel universe where World War II never occurred and books, papers, and a single library remain a thing of the past. It is a game about scheming, suspense, crime, and the danger of power. The game is for adult audiences only. HISTORY: 1930s London, England. Theo Brand, a young woman with a mysterious past, arrives at a mysterious mansion that serves as the home of the Garrington family. By the time she arrives, someone has already been murdered. She soon learns that the house is a library, where anyone may read or write, and that if their story is well-written, the house itself will grant their wishes. Since Theo's story is well-written, the Garrington family adopt her as their own. In the castle, tensions mount as everyone is caught up in their own stories. One of those stories is Theo's. "1931: Scheherazade at the Library of Pergamum features a well-told story, and a refreshingly free-flowing plot, which will reveal new aspects of the tale with each play through." 5/5 – Jay is Games "1931 is a visually stunning, well-written, deeply suspenseful, and involving piece of interactive fiction. Tell me that doesn't sound like a perfect fit for the reader of this site." 5/5 – ShadowWatcher "I, too, love the visual novel about a female protagonist. No, you don't need to understand this to enjoy the game." 5/5 – TheHorseLover "It's history, it's a lesson to be learned, it's an adventure, it's a thriller; 1930s London, a library for everyone, and a murderer still on the loose. The Garrington family, a hive of humanity, have their secrets—and their scandals—secrets that are well worth keeping." Reviews: "1931: Scheherazade at the Library of Pergamum is simply one of the best visual novels I have ever played." 4.5/5 – Jay is Games "1931 is the rare game that is truly suspenseful, is intelligent, and carries the weight of every choice you make with a compelling tale." 4.9/5 – BaehrObain c9d1549cdd

's Most Popular Move: Version 2 From the opening moments to the moment us in the backseat of the Hummer, Max from Jump King's Transmediale performance was nothing short of electric. Though the dance-punk act has been building momentum ever since the release of its stellar 2014 debut, Night Under the Stars, their show at Tomorrowland was the most "real and visceral" version of the move that we had ever seen. Not only were the band's knees covered in protective gear, but the crew had placed a suspended platform between the band and our faces, aiming to keep us safe. The jump was intense, but as we'd learn later, they'd been doing this for more than a year. As guitarist Tijl Zijlstra describes it, they did the move on a flat stage for their U.K. and European tours, adding that it was only about "a year ago" that they moved to this high platform. We couldn't wait to know more. Of course, they were hyped to tell us about it. Jump King is more than just music. Zijlstra gave us a brief history of the project (in which a former producer from his former class "jumped in front of me") and We're The Ocean's Alex Snodgrass gave us a rundown on the evolution of the move. It's been a while since I've seen them—a great band has been on my radar almost since they started—so I asked them about the modifications that they've made. Regarding their desire to make the jump visual, Tijl told us "when there is sound, normally there are sounds you can hear between the people jumping, but when there is no sound, and you just see the light, that's the moving version of that." As the band describes it, the jump can exist in two different versions: the "classic" and "risqué." That's the general tenor of Jump King. It's interesting to see what they consider 'classic.' They've made a significant change on the perch, incorporating a rope net and standing 'obstacles' in front of the microphone so it's harder to see who is actually jumping, which was deemed an issue in the first "classic" version. They're also making it

Israel to start excavations around Dead Sea on Monday Published duration 21 October 2015 image copyright AFP image caption The search for the cave is part of the David Livingstone expedition Israel is starting an archaeological dig near the Dead Sea to search for the tomb of an 18th Century missionary. US archaeologist Professor Dan Bahat's team was due to start the excavation on Monday in a cave beside the Sea of Salt, on the Israel-Jordan border. He was one of two American archaeologists and a team of local Bedouin diggers who have been searching for the cave for months. In 1848 David Livingstone discovered the cave, where he said he had encountered a Biblical character called Adam. "We have done everything possible to help and spare the environment," Prof Bahat told AP news agency on Sunday. Search failed But he said the team was "sad" to discover that the cave where the man was believed to have been buried had been lost. The cave is located next to a rock formation called "Adam's Limestone" which he described as "a huge amphitheatre filled with breathtakingly wild and beautiful scenery". During the UK-based Livingstone's time digging at the cave, he claimed that he had witnessed a man named Adam who was around 850 years old. He also said that he had witnessed two Biblical figures who were leading people to realise that the New Testament contained the Book of Genesis. But despite the search for the cave's original location being rediscovered in 1992, the dig has continued. The team was still certain that the site could not lie in the immediate area of the salt lake but was exploring other possible locations. image copyright AP image caption The Amman-Kasrein border is marked by large rocks at the Dead Sea Mosaic map The dig has also yielded a number of Samaritan vestiges and records indicating that the Samaritans lived in the area more than 2,000 years ago. "All of this fills me with wonder in a very new and optimistic way," professor Bah
