Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a method of removing a ferrous hydroxide scale forming from surfaces of water wells and water holding tanks. More particularly, the present invention relates to an apparatus for removing the scale from the water holding tanks of electric power generating steam-electric plants for the purpose of performing maintenance and repair work on the boilers used in such plants. 2. State of the Art Water well scales are a problem for steam-electric power generating plants for a number of reasons. When a well is drilled, the formation of scale will occur in the well tubing. When the well is completed and drilling fluids are pumped down the well, the presence of scale will occur in the well casing. When the well casing is perforated to allow fluids from the formations in the well for the purpose of producing hydrocarbons, or when flow lines are run through the well casing for the purpose of connecting the well with the boilers of the power plant, or in any case when the well casing becomes damaged and leaks, scale will form in the tubing. Accordingly, it is necessary to perform scaling and other well maintenance work on water wells associated with power plants for the purpose of protecting the wells and the plant equipment. However, such work is time consuming and costly, and it is desirable to perform such work in a less time consuming and cost effective manner. Plant operators have the option of cleaning the scale from their water well by removing the well tubing from the well and running the tubing in a well cleaning rig. If the well cannot be removed, however, it is necessary for the operators to transport a cleaning rig from the plant to

Meeting Caterers Reaches New Heights at SIU More than 300 people attended the Thunderbird Student Council Meeting on Oct. 21, which featured a generous offer from the Thunderbird Catering Committee in hopes of meeting the increased demand for a summer food catering services. Prices, hours and numerous other details pertaining to the offer are posted on the catering committee's website www.thunderbirdcatering.org. The service is divided between lunch and dinner, and prices range from $8 to $10, with some meals including dessert. "It seems like summer catering season is going to be bigger than last summer," said Connie Goodman, Thunderbird catering committee president. Adding to the demand was an increase in dining hall meals, which resulted in a drop in both the number of meals served and the number of students served by cafeteria workers. "It's a good situation all the way around," Goodman said. The offer is for Thunderbird students only, but in the weeks before the meeting, other universities reported that others were asking to use the service. The Thunderbird catering committee has received positive feedback from students and their guests who have used the service in the past, said Kevin Sinoff, Thunderbird's director of housing and dining services. "It's as good as it gets" for dining, "and I'm very grateful for that," said Catherine Van Hoeven, a student in Thunderbird's Experimental College. "We are trying to keep things as simple as possible for students," Van Hoeven said. "I can't think of a better way to do it." The guests of the catering committee members during the meeting were asked to write down their suggestions for the service. Some of the most popular requests were more chicken and beef lasagnas, more salads, including more vegetarian options, variety of desserts and a move to a buffet setup for large events. "We are trying to fill every slot we can," Goodman said, adding that during the session, they noted that the meal plan hasn't included a lot of vegetable options. "Our last meal plan was a very heavy meat protein meal, so we're trying to get away from that," she said. According to marketing and branding specialist Jennifer Brodeur, the catering committee decided to go public with the offer to try to entice students to use the service. "We felt like we had a good product, and we wanted to give it to people," she said. "We'd love Occ13bf012

'The politicians are trying to destroy us', he quotes them," Sam said. "I think he's just being a little histrionic. "When you write a song like 'Losing My Religion', which I think is a very dark song, it does tend to go a bit far. "It's not quite as black and white as he makes it sound. "The idea is that he's making an analogy between having the government disappear away and taking away all your religion, and that's what Iggy was alluding to. "I'm glad he wrote that song because that really became his theme in the middle of the record, the idea that he was no longer a political animal. "There are many songs on the record where he's spitting at the government and making a political stance, but he quickly realised that wasn't the only way to approach a song, to make it a personal statement, that wasn't necessarily political." Sam ended the interview by saying that he wasn't completely sure of his thoughts on the matter, but hopefully everyone would be able to enjoy this album. "I wish Iggy all the best and we'd be glad to play alongside him," he said.Q: Python: Skip reading next line until it contains a list of words In my current project I am having the following problem.
