Sheep fattening diets and environmental forage degradation: effects of different nutritional strategies, and their influence on animal health. We determined the influence of changing the forage level and nutritional strategies on animal health in sheep fattening systems. Three groups of ten sheep, female, between 45 and 55 kg of body weight, were submitted to a 3-month experiment where they received three different concentrates/forage (C/F) ratio: 0.7 (C/F 0.7), 1.2 (C/F 1.2) and 0.7 C/F and different forages: grass-legume mix (G/L), grass (L), or dry endophyte fungus culture (F) as only forage source. The rations were formulated with CP and metabolizable energy (ME) to meet 10% and 10.2% above maintenance, respectively. The animals consumed 1.55 kg of DM daily.
