tenter de comprendre ce paradoxe, regardons ce qui se passe la nuit.Â . .In the myocardium, sodium (Na) and calcium (Ca) channels are linked in an all-or-none mode so as to regulate myocardial contraction, whereas nerve and muscle (Na) channels are linked in a graded mode so as to regulate the excitability of nerve and muscle. However, questions have been raised as to the significance of this dual role of (Na) channels in the myocardium.

This application proposes to use a combination of techniques of molecular biology, pharmacology and biochemistry to answer these questions. The specific aims of the research project are to (1) define the sequence of the voltage-gated (Na) channel beta subunit which contains the putative pore-forming region; (2) characterize the physiologic properties of the beta subunit in expression systems; (3) determine the tissue distribution of the beta subunit protein and mRNA expression in mammalian and fish species; (4) examine the structure of the mRNA for the beta subunit; (5) define the tissue localization of the full-length and truncated forms of the beta subunit in mammals and fish species; and (6) transfect the beta subunit into cell lines for analysis of its electrophysiological and pharmacological properties. Molecular biology will be used to define the sequence of the beta subunit cDNA, and biochemical techniques will be used to test the hypothesis that the beta subunit is responsible for the dual regulation of (Na) channels in the myocardium. Antibodies to the beta subunit will be used to examine the expression of the subunit in tissues and cells; also, the specific aims of the beta subunit mRNA studies will be to define its structure by generating a cDNA library from mammalian and fish heart. Finally, the electrophysiology and pharmacology of the beta subunit will be studied in cell lines by transfecting the subunit cDNA into cell lines so that a site-directed mutation can be made to examine the role of specific amino acids in the pore-forming region. The long-term goal of this project is to understand the
