Buying a home is one of the biggest purchases you'll make in your lifetime, and it's also one of the biggest investments you'll ever make. Unfortunately, some people who should know better make certain costly mistakes that can have serious consequences when it comes to buying a home. These mistakes might seem like common sense, and for many, they are. A realtor's job is to present you with homes for which you might otherwise have qualified. If you're buying a home under certain circumstances, such as when it's a cash deal and you're first-time homebuyer, you might feel as if you can't afford to compete with other buyers. However, it may make sense to try and make a deal if you know the seller is not going to counter. If you've got a longer time horizon to make your purchase, the market could be drying up. If the seller knows you'll be the only buyer and offers a
