RecentÂ .Recognizing that traditional gaps in the training of patients with diabetes lead to worse outcomes, and that a comprehensive multidisciplinary approach is needed to achieve optimal control, the American Diabetes Association's Committee on Diabetes Education and Care has recently developed a new comprehensive educational program, Diabetes Self-Management Education and Support. This can best be accomplished through a self-help format such as a patient's manual. It is essential that the manual be easy to follow, in order to optimize patient education and compliance. This application requests support for the third revision of the Diabetes Self-Management Education and Support manual. This manual provides guidance and support to patients in learning to self-manage the care of diabetes, and in understanding the determinants of disease control, diet, physical activity, and the self-care regimen. Re-evaluation of all previous revisions has led to the identification of four areas which would benefit from revision: (a) the first edition of the manual contained information on hypoglycemia. However, this information was inconsistent. The revised edition of the manual will correct this problem; (b) chapter 2 describes the expectations of patients in relation to their own health. In the first edition, this was introduced in the context of diet- and exercise-related risks. However, a more comprehensive discussion of patient expectations has been included in the revised edition; (c) the new edition of the manual includes information on the use of alternative therapies such as acupuncture and reflexology. Also in the previous edition, a chapter entitled "Dual Diagnosis: Diabetes Management" was included. However, this section has been replaced by new information in chapter 8. This chapter includes treatment options which have been recommended by clinical practice guidelines and is now available in a larger size font; (d) the roles of patients in self-care are
