The effect of crude glycerin (CG) produced from fermentative products of milk from Borodino's breed of cows on the acidogenesis of Streptococcus salivarius was studied. CG had a bactericidal effect on the studied bacterium only at a concentration of 4% that attained a stabilization of pH in the medium of 4.34-4.32. The highest activity of CG was observed at a concentration of 2% with a dynamic of pH change 4.26-4.23. At lower concentrations of CG the bactericidal effect was not detected and the acidogenesis of Streptococcus salivarius was intensified. The increase of the bacterium with effective glycerin concentrations was accompanied by a two-fold increase in the production of lactic acid and a decrease of the production of acetic acid in the broth. The quantity of lactic acid was also higher than that of acetic acid. On the basis of the results obtained it is assumed that at the glucose concentration in the medium of 0.1% low CG concentrations may stimulate the production of the pathogen and its acidogenesis whereas high CG concentrations may inhibit the production of lactic acid.

I have to send `form.serialize()` to the server to pass to
