I have forked a repo and run it locally.

When I make some changes to the master branch and want to "push" them up to the master branch in the upstream repo, my changed files are not automatically "checked out" of the upstream repo's master branch, and instead I have to explicitly check out the upstream repo's master branch by entering the command $ git checkout upstream/master How can I change this to automate the process? A: That's not a repository, that's a branch. You can't clone a repository. You clone a branch
