work fine before, and I haven't changed anything. I found an issue that was similar, but not the same issue. A: Are you talking about tab characters at the start of lines? If so, it should be either a new tab or a new window. If it's the latter, just click on it so the Python shell opens in a new window. Otherwise, it's probably a new tab and you have default settings that is missing a newline. Go to Edit -> Preferences

-> Appearance and check "Show new line characters" and "Show whitespace characters". A: This is a good idea, but I use the following shortcut. It is not perfect, but it might be the equivalent of hitting

"Ctrl-S", "Ctrl-Q", "Enter". Try "Exit". I'm actually the author of this question and the method I am using is the same as the accepted answer. A: Python does not have a newline by default. Use "Fnter" instead to add a new line. Mike Zimmer is the hottest head coach in the NFL right now. That notion was pushed to new heights early Tuesday afternoon. c6a93da74d
